Politics aside, Flow My Tears, the Policeman Said is, in the end, a deeply humanist novel, which questions the roles life requires us to play, and the way in which those roles may in fact inhibit rather than enhance our growth and our ability to connect to each other meaningfully. It does get a bit maudlin toward the end, and Dick doesn't always concern himself with strict logical continuity in his plotting either.

"Flow, my tears" is a lute song (specifically, an "ayre") by the accomplished lutenist and composer John Dowland (1563–1626). Originally composed as an instrumental under the name "Lachrimae pavane" in 1596, it is Dowland's most famous ayre, and became his signature song, literally as well as metaphorically: he would occasionally sign his name "Jo. . Dolandi de Lach

Flow My Tears, the Policeman Said - Wikiwand

Set in the distant future reality of 1988, 'Flow my Tears, the Policeman Said' is classic Philip K. Dick exploring dual realities and human authenticity in a hallucinatory dreamscape of a novel. As many of Dick's novels have done, 'Flow my Tears' quickly went from 'that other Philip K. Dick novel on my book shelf and haven't read yet, to one of my top three Dick stories.
