Motorcycle front fork alignment??? : motorcycles

to secure the axle on a KTM, nut is clutch lever side but you have to tight the throttle side axle pinch bolts to hold the axle to do that. once the axle nut is torqued, you torque the clutch lever side axle pinch bolts. then you loosen the throttle side axle pinch bolts, forks will set itself (that is the slide you saw in the video) then re-torque.

First - the WP48's are VERY strong. They rarely get bent or knocked out of alignment. I've bought two KTM's with bent frames and trashed front wheels. The forks and triple clamps were just fine, not even tweaked. Second - if you just dropped the bike and the forks look crooked, it's not the forks. You've probably bent the handle bar mounts.
