On nice days (like today) I sincerely think that life is very simple: we only make it complicated. I think there is only one internal force that drives all human activity; it is the search for safety. This was developed during the evolution of all lifeforms and thus also in humans. We can see it has been a very useful drive if look at how successful humans have been in controlling the world ...

Zen is a Chinese school of Mahayana Buddhism. Buddhism was first brought to China from India, by Bodhidharma. It developed in China, into Zen, in the 6th century. From China it spread to Vietnam, Korea and Japan. Zen is a Japanese word translated from the Chinese word Chán, which means "meditation". Zen uses meditation to help practitioners go beyond simply thinking about Zen.
