This chapter examines the military society in modern European states during the 18th century. It attempts to answer the question whether the early modern state created a military instrument commensurate with its ambitions in the realm of power politics or whether the exigencies of martial rationality militarized the machinery of power in Europe from the 16th century onwards.

Difference between Traditional and Modern Society

It ended, however, with the victory of the Modern State, which completely absorbed the power of the families and established the reign of anonymity. In France, for instance, the two reforms made by Richelieu and Colbert against feudal rights, respectively under Louis XIII and Louis XIV, destroyed the power of the families and the characteristics of feudal life.

Thus, while the traditional society is characterised by ritual, custom, collectivity, community ownership, status quo and continuity and simple division of labour, the modern society is characterised by rise of science, emphasis on reason and rationality, belief in progress, viewing government and the state as essential in bringing about progress, emphasis on economic development and com ...

State (polity) - Wikipedia

The state is a particular kind of society, a group sovereign over a specific territory, and the balance of powers manifesting this sovereignty is the political system. The political system may not encompass all of society, and indeed may be restricted to a limited sphere. Nonetheless, the type of political system and type of society are congruent.

Modern State and Its Problems - Political Science Notes

Modernization - Modernization - The nature of modern society; Modernity must be understood, in part at least, against the background of what went before. Industrial society emerged only patchily and unevenly out of agrarian society, a system that had endured for 5,000 years. Industrial structures thus took much of their characteristic form and colour from the rejection, conscious or ...
